7	The goals of the shared governance m n 4 / 2 / 2` n

19	The regularity of meetings, opportunity for all constituent groups to participate, and transparency of the entire process, including publishing of agenda, materials, and minutes - and, in some cases, meeting highlights - in one place on the college website.	3/28/2015 2:12 AM
20	The councils and the number of committees give ame opportunity for voices from all constituents to propose, participate, be informed and influence the strategic evolution and resource allocation of resource of the institution.	3/27/2015 7:01 PM
21	Every important function of the college has a council or committee, comprising representatives of all the different constituent groups, organized to get and receive information about the major decisions and undertakings. Each type of decision has a clear process path, and the potential exists for everyone in the world to be informed of every decision, every project, and every concern being discussed, analyzed, or worked on. This system should eliminate complaints that decisions are made in secret, that people aren't being told what's going on, or that some people don't have a voice in what happens. And, decisions should be stronger, because they have the benefit of lots of different perspectives before they became final.	3/27/2015 6:25 PM
22	I feel when it comes to student issues we are treated like children who are just nagging. Our issues are met at first with annoyed looks, and deep "sighs". The councils disregard our attempts sometimes to bring issues to light for instance the safety council and the no smoking policy. That policy had no student in put and when we tried to give our opinion we were told "theres nothing we can do now its already written" (Jason Houghes)	3/27/2015 5:22 PM

17	I think we might benefit from having a discussion about either having a uniform standard for quorum, or guidelines about what a fair and workable quorum rule might be. Some councils and committees struggle with attendance, and a laxer quorum rule could keep decisions moving. The same is true for attendance--at what point do we get to conclude that someone just doesn't want to be on the committee or council? And what if they are	ht benef
